BACKGROUND

The Alliance of South Eastern European Universities (<http://www.aceu-edu.org/>) organizes this year's 10th conference under the title Economic, Security and Environmental Challenges of Regional Development, providing an opportunity for all partners to play their part and present their ideas. Theory of regional integration has long been the driving force behind the manifold development needs of small open economies of the South-Eastern Europe (and elsewhere), considering that their individual sizes are typically insufficient for reaching economies of scale. Consequently, they face obstacles in achieving competitiveness and sustainable export penetration of large markets on their own. However, regional integration processes in Europe seem to be in crisis themselves, due to various monetary, fiscal, banking, environmental, demographic, agricultural, security, political as well as trade issues and obstacles. This conference aims at addressing those challenges and offering potential solutions, with a particular focus on Central and South-East European economies and the EU.
